

Berardina De Carolis is an assistant professor at Department of Computer Science, University of Bari "Aldo Moro", Italy, where she leads the Intelligent Interfaces Lab. Her research interests at the moment include affective computing, social robotics, and user modeling. She has published over 150 scientific papers in international journals, books, and conference proceedings. She is in the program committee of several international conferences, and guest editor of special issues of international scientific journals as well as a regular reviewer of many other international journals. She was involved in the organization of several workshops on intelligent interfaces and social robotics.